Dittmar Farm among tri-state pumpkin patches to pick from

BY JIM SWENSON jim.swenson@thmedia.com Oct 8, 2017

Nikki Schreiber and her son Desmond Schreiber, 2, both of Galena, Ill., look for pumpkins at Dittmar Farms & Orchard in Elizabeth, Ill.

The winding and rolling car ride over to Dittmar Farms & Orchard's Pumpkin Patch about six miles northeast of Elizabeth, Ill., can be breathtaking this time of year.

"When the leaves start changing, it's worth coming out just for the view," said Rick Dittmar, co-owner of the 165-acre farm.

Then, you get to pick pumpkins. Or take a hayride. Get lost in a corn maze. Eat, drink and be merry during weekends in October.

Dittmar's is one of several family-centered tri-state area destinations where people can enjoy a cool day in a rural setting up through Halloween.

"We always try to come up with something new, something outside of the box," said Dittmar, 66. "We've added pony rides this year. And, there's a Drive an Antique Tractor. We have three antique tractors that people can try out. We're hoping to also offer tethered balloon rides."

His wife, Peg; son, Mike; and daughter-in-law, Jonna, also run the operation.

They have 10 varieties of pumpkins in their three-acre field. Among them are extra large and flat ones; gray, white and striped ones.

"Our sales of pumpkin bread and doughnuts are going really well," Dittmar said.

The Pumpkin Patch started four years ago, after the family had been hosting fall family gatherings in previous years.

"We only have 50 tillable acres," Mike said. "We were looking for profitable ways to use it."

Last year, they added a covered pavilion.

"Some people like to come out just to sit under the pavilion, talk and eat food," Rick said.

Apples have been a big part of the farm since before pumpkins arrived. There are 100 producing apple trees. They planted 600 more this past year.

"We started the pumpkin patch to get a market for the apples, but the pumpkin patch took off," Mike said.
